Panel – Disability Disclosure in Academia: The Risks and Benefits

Chair: Alice Wexler

Panelists: Alexandra Allen, Shivani Bhalla, J.T. Eisenhauer, Timothy Smith

Respondent: Albert Stabler

The panelists discuss the meaning and importance of disclosing/not disclosing disability in academia and the potential benefits and risks of both choices through their life experiences and positionality within a theoretical framework. We argue that the coupling of disability and the pandemic make essential the disclosure of positionality. The intent is to communicate cultural understanding through the lens of disability studies, self-examination, and personal experience. Theory omits critical aspects that lived experience affords from which essential understandings can be communicated.
